3. The above arrangements will in no way preclude the other intelligence organizations from arranging subsequent conferences for strictly departmental matters.

All those attending should be prepared to question the official from a specialized intelligence viewpoint, since such conferences are not meant for general orientation or passive participation.

5. Intelligence specialists who are not able to attend the conferences, or who do not wish to present their questions orally, may submit them to the presiding officer either before or during the meeting. Questions so submitted should bear the name and organization of the intelligence specialist submitting them.

6. Because of the informality of such conferences, special security precautions are essential. All of those whose names are submitted for attendance must have been cleared for TOP SECRET by their respective intelligence organizations, and should know in advance of the substance of the attached Security Agreement, a copy of which they will be asked to sign before each conference.
